Literature Review

(Dincer, 2007) An organization can be described as strong, equal or weak compared to their competitors based on five criterias: Relative market situation, relative financial structure, relative production and technical capacity, relative research and development potential, relative human capacity and management effectiveness.

(Ulgen and Mirze, 2010) The organization has to answer to the threats of the outside environment by using its strengths. All these issues highlight the importance of organizational strengths.

(Pearce and Robinson, 1991) A weakness is a limitation or deficiency in resource, skills, and capabilities that seriously impedes an organization's effective performance. Facilities, financial resources, management capabilities, marketing skills, and brand image can be sources of weaknesses.

(Harrison and St. John, 2004) Opportunities are conditions in the external environment that allow an organization to take advantage of organizational strengths, overcome organizational weaknesses or neutralize environmental threats.

(Ulgen and Mirze, 2010) Threats are the situations that come out as a result of the changes in the distant or the immediate environment that would prevent the organization from maintaining its existence or lose its superiority in competition, and that are not favourable for the organization.

(Popescu and Scarlat 2015), in a similar perception, support that SWOT analysis provides only a separate understanding of the internal and external environmental changes, therefore does not show how the internal and external factors of the business organization are interconnected and how to compare them.
