Introduction

“As a parliamentarian and particularly as Prime Minister, Atalji made innumerable contributions which paved the way for a stronger economy through bold reforms and rapid development of infrastructure. Atalji also distinguished himself as a fine statesman and a world leader,” the release said. The late leader was conferred Bharat Ratna in 2015. He had also been awarded Pt. Govind Ballabh Pant Award for Best Parliamentarian in 1994. It will be Atal Bihari Vajpayee’ 96th birth anniversary this year.

His Role in Women Education

Atal Bihari Vajpayee focused on women education. Government at central as well as state level is fully committed towards the education of females. “BetiBachao, BetiPadhao” with other schemes is the biggest initiative of the government in this direction. The government has offered many monetary as well as non-monetary initiatives. Females are more educated than ever before.

According to Atal Bihari Vajpayee the modern generation is quite different in their thinking level if compared with the generation two or three decades ago. Modern generation is trendsetter and they don't want to bind their female counterparts and even supporting in their work. Family Background: Usually, the existing members adopt the same business as their old one's family and the businesses are handover to the males. However, if there is no male their then such opportunities come to female members and nobody wants to miss such opportunities.

Government at central as well as state level is coming forward to promote the female counterparts through concession, training programmes as well as other modes in their policy and women are just reaping that offer.

There are many women in all states, India as well as worldwide who got success in their respective field, which initially seemed an impossible task. Such successful personalities have really energized women all over the world in direct as well as indirect way.

Atal Bihari Vajpayee's Contribution

Atal Bihari Vajpayee left an enduring engraving on India's international strategy that he helped shape both as the main non-Congress Foreign Minister and later as Prime Minister. While he made his imprint as Foreign Minister, turning into the principal individual to convey a discourse to the United Nations General Assembly in Hindi, as PM he took activities that characterized India's relations with significant forces with regards to evolving international affairs. In March 2000, when US President Bill Clinton visited India, he was the first US President to do as such in quite a while since President Jimmy Carter in 1978. During this visit the different sides marked a complete report: "India Relations: A Vision for the 21st Century" which established the framework that changed Indo-US ties. Sandeep Bhardwaj writes in the News Central, about Vajpayee's contribution to the Hindutva plan, that goes past the destruction of the Babri Masjid and the 2002 Gujarat riots, which has made the way for the present political environment of communalism, hyper-patriotism and dread. Bhardwaj clarifies how 'Indians began finding new 'enemies of nationals' in their middle ordinary' and how 'against Muslim propaganda got typical' under the Vajpayee government.

SumitPande, Political Editor, CNN News18-As body politic turns exceptionally captivated, Vajpayee was maybe one of the last examples to have shown both philosophical responsibility and adaptability of "genuine governmental issues" to swim through a mind-boggling bureaucratic vote-based system India is. That last part of Parliamentarians who were similarly quiet in the consecrated corridors of the Parliament House and the crude of constituent governmental issues of Indrajit Gupta, Chandrashekhar and a couple of others from that age would make the cut. But supporting oneself for more than fifty years in public legislative issues is in no way, shape or form a simple errand. You win a few races and you lose a few. The test, nonetheless, is to stay applicable to endure and battle one more day. Of the multitude of political pioneers who have arrived at statures in India, Vajpayee was the most thoughtful. His most noteworthy contribution was to bring the Jana Sangh in from the virus disregard of the Congress foundation and make the BJP a broadly acknowledged gathering. In the manner conservative politicians were depicted in those days of the 70s, he shouldn't be so delicate. As a man from the RSS, he ought to have been more a figure simple to excuse, more cardboard cut-out than the exquisite fragile living creature and blood individual that he was. L K Advani, Indian Politician, who alongside Vajpayee was a focal figure in the party for a lot of its reality, today depicted the Atalji as one of the country's most noteworthy legislators and his dearest companion for more than 65 years whom he will miss hugely. Vajpayee's charming administration characteristics, hypnotizing rhetoric and taking off patriotism was striking. I had the advantage of working with Atalji as his agent for a very long time.

Day to day activities are discussed regularly to form a sense of belonging in the community.

Mr. Vajpayee's long career in public life was no doubt crowned by his being elected Prime Minister, but the course of it was peppered with long years as a parliamentarian, and with struggles to establish the Bharatiya Jana Sangh, and later the BJP, in national politics. In the present paper; the research scholar writes that women are as important as men. They can do everything what men can do. They go to the office and earn money. They help the family members to lead a happy life. This is our moral duty to motivate them to work hard. They respect us. We should respect them.

Summing Up

To sum up; the research scholar comes to the point that Vajpayee was a solid patriot, with a solid feeling of his Hinduness, which was social and civilizational, for example the essential faithfulness of residents was to the country. Without a word, or idea, for "religion" in any Indian language, he used to freely say that the State had no job in any person's decision of upasanapadhati (types of love). There could be no separation/power, in the decision of conviction frameworks. Vajpayee's greatest contribution is that he started a legislative issue of compromise and harmonization in India. It was a marvel those days: how is it possible that a would individual guideline with an alliance of 21 ideological groups with various belief systems for six and a half years. We should take in the specialty of compromise from Atalji. Atal Bihari Vajpayee was mainstream for his authority and diplomacy, but additionally for his own characteristics. Indeed, even the individuals who contrasted with him, held him in high regard. Vajpayee had a major heart that obliged individuals regardless of their religion, race or area. In the present paper; the research scholar tried to explain attract the attention of the readers and researchers towards the role and contribution of Atal Bihari Vajpayee in Indian Politics.
